Wildlife

● Common Backyard Birds

Parks, trails and open spaces are great spots to capture and identify the bird species that are located in our community. We've created a short list of common backyard birds to help you identify the winged friends that can be found at feeders and in the backyard. For more detailed information regarding bird species, calls and other great information, visit the Cornell Lab of Ornithology at <https://www.birds.cornell.edu/home/>. If you would like to ID a bird that isn't on this list, the Cornell Lab also has an app, the Merlin Bird ID, which is a great resource for determining species that may be difficult to identify, visit <https://merlin.allaboutbirds.org/>.

- The Cornell Lab of Ornithology has several live feeds of bird species that give us insight and first-hand views of baby birds from birth to when they fledge their nest. Use this link to watch barred owls, albatross, kestrels, red-tailed hawks, petrels and backyard birds! <https://www.allaboutbirds.org/cams/>
